Heritage Society: Honoring Enduring Commitment to Animals

The Heritage Society for Animals recognizes donors who have chosen to express their devotion and commitment to animals through their estate plans to benefit School of Veterinary Medicine programs and activities.

At this year’s reception on March 30, Dean Bennie Osburn welcomed thirty-two new members to the Heritage Society for Animals. They join the more than 440 friends of the school who have already been recognized and welcomed into this prestigious group. Some members are devoted to companion animals, others are horse enthusiasts, and still others are conservationists concerned about wildlife preservation.

Estate gifts establish a permanent legacy for donors and make a significant, lasting impact on the school. These gifts enable the school to continue advancing companion animal research to find cures for diseases, providing the finest possible care to patients, and educating the best veterinarians of tomorrow.

“We are grateful to our Heritage Society members for their generosity. They will be forever remembered for their devotion to animals,” says Dean Osburn. “Their gifts will advance our school and guarantee that animals receive the best in veterinary medicine for generations to come.”
